RSS is a family of Web feed formats used to publish frequently updated works such as blog entries, news headlines, audio, and video in a standardized format.[2] An RSS document (which is called a "feed," "web feed,"[3] or "channel") includes full or summarized text plus metadata such as publish dates and authors. Web feeds benefit publishers by letting them syndicate content quickly and automatically. They benefit readers who want to subscribe to timely updates from favored websites or to aggregate feeds from many sites into one place.

Counter means how many times all the visitors visit the site.

This option will be enabled whenever you want to put your desired product in the shopping cart.

In computing, a grayscale or greyscale digital image is an image in which the value of each pixel is a single sample, that is, it carries the full (and only) information about its intensity. Images of this sort are composed exclusively of shades of neutral gray, varying from black at the weakest intensity to white at the strongest.

Grayscale images are distinct from black-and-white images, which in the context of computer imaging are images with only two colors, black and white (also called bi-level, binary images); grayscale images have many shades of gray in between.

Here this option is inactive.
